How did the Fund perform in the last year?

The Fund modestly underperformed the benchmark — a 60%/40% blend of the Russell 3000 Index (USD) (TR) and the Bloomberg Intermediate U.S. Aggregate Bond Index (USD) — for the 12-month period ending June 30, 2026.

Within the Fund's equity component, holdings in the energy sector lagged relative to the benchmark's energy sector holdings, weighing on performance for the reporting period. Fund performance benefited from an overweight to the semiconductor sector but was hampered by an underweight to the aerospace and defense industry, which outperformed within the benchmark. The Fund also benefited from not owning tobacco company stocks, as the sector underperformed within the benchmark Russell 3000 Index (USD) for the reporting period.

The performance of the Fund's fixed-income component was supported by an overweight to agency mortgage-backed securities ("MBS"). Security selection within the sector also contributed to performance, as the Fund's managers generally favored specified pools over to-be-announced ("TBA") exposure. (TBA securities are forward contracts to buy or sell mortgage-backed securities ("MBS") without immediately identifying the exact underlying loans.) An underweight to corporate credit was a detractor as spreads remained tight during the reporting period, although this was partially offset by positive security selection within the corporate sector. An overweight to asset-backed securities ("ABS") bolstered Fund performance, with the managers generally favoring prime tranches, and an allocation to AAA rated collateralized loan obligations ("CLOs") also had a positive impact. A slightly long duration posture and an overweight to the 2-year segment of the yield curve weighed on Fund performance as the market shifted from pricing in additional rate cuts in 2026 to considering the possibility of a less accommodative Federal Reserve monetary policy path.
